This male 2014 Key Corn is now 25" long, eating frozen/thawed fuzzy mice. He barely shows any Pied-sided features anywhere other than his head (and a little here-and-there on his sides), but his father has decent white on his sides. Both of his parents never got red as they matured, instead retaining the diffusion and color most common in Key Corns. Why the eye shows so little contrast between pupil and iris is a mystery to me?
