

Two sub-adult "Old-school" Bloodred corn snakes, so-called for their darker reds that were most common in this morph when they were first described in the hobby. Most of the markings seen on these two corns will diffuse more with maturity, but will always be visible, just like the original Bloodred corns from decades ago. U.S. one-dollar bill in the picture for color reference.