

This beautiful Anery-type corn is the 2nd generation product of pairing two snakes I acquired in the early 2000s from Nancy Wimer (thank you, Nancy). Nancy sent a beautiful adult Anery Motley and an adult Charcoal that I bred to get many Anery babies. Breeding just about any two of them together yielded one like toDAY's featured snake in each brood. In addition to Snows, Aneries, Charcoals and potentially RedFactor mutants, there was just one each season like this one. The pink speaks for itself (surely one of the red-modifying gene mutations?), but I also suspect that this one (and her predecessors from other seasons) is both Charcoal and Anery? Trials should reveal what she is hiding?
