

Upon searching archived image files for examples of carotenoid exhibition in corns, I came across this picture of a High-white Reverse Okeetee that we featured in 2016. Does this snake not beg the question, "is the carotenoid renderings relegated to the upper dermal layers?"? Breeding one to a Scaleless "corn" is surely the only way to know where the carotenoid renderings reside