

Show & Tell

2005 heavily-yellow female Snow corn. We'll see if she decides to grace me with eggs this year. I didn't breed her to anything for about six years (did not need any hatchling Snow corns), but two years ago I decided to breed her to a Snow Tessera to see if I could get these heavy-yellow markings on an otherwise white Tessera Snow, but-like last year-she failed to produce eggs. This will be strike three for her if she doesn't give me eggs again this year, bred to a Tessera het Scaleless Anery a few weeks ago. Fingers crossed!?
