

Show & Tell

"Halo" Snow Corns were named for their thin greenish/yellowish blotch borders. Just like so many (? all ?) corn snakes that transform from one look as a hatchling to a sometimes dramatically different look when mature, when these first hatch they barely demonstrate any yellow or green around their markings, and most look like classic Snows for several weeks or months after hatching. Anyone who bought Snow corns from us in the past few months should take a close look at them, since I sold all of the siblings of this snake before they were old enough to exhibit any yellow or green?
