

Show & Tell

It will be interesting to see how this Cherry Blizzard corn transforms in color throughout maturity. This is the first one in the world. She shows far too much contrast between saddles and ground color zones to be a good example of a nearly pattern-less Blizzard, but if contrast heightens, she should be an amazing corn when mature? She appears to have just one copy of the Cherry gene mutation—therefore, she's a Visual-het?