

Show & Tell

We will be making and selling more of these gems this summer. These are Scaleless Anery Tessera corn snakes from the 2015 hatching season. Most have few or no scales anywhere but their bellies and around their mouths, but some—like the one showing all the black freckling—have random tiny scales that appear in some assemblage of fragmented pattern. Those black freckles are actually tiny, round black scales. Note: ALL Scaleless corns in the hobby toDAY derive from the original pairing of a Corn Snake to an Emory's Ratsnake (aka: Great Plains Ratsnake) and are therefore technically inter-species hybrids. Bonus Pic . . .

< style="font-size: 12.16px; line-height: 15.808px;" />

Another 2015 Scaleless Anery Tessera corn.