

Show & Tell

A brood of corns that were chillin-out under a water bowl last week. I usually keep newly hatched corns in their incubation boxes since the damp vermiculite helps keep them super-hydrated-in preparation for sloughing their first obsolete skin generation-but I prematurely moved these onto aspen before their first sheds. They still mass together so as to retain moisture better. From an Ultramel, Het Blizzard and Charcoal bred to the RedFactor Blizzard, you are seeing some Blizzards, Ultramel Charcoals, Ultramels and Amels. After their first shed and a few meals, they will be offered for sale on our web site.
