

Show & Tell

This gravid PARADOX Lavender Corn Snake (named KATE MOSS) is owned by Dave Partington. She was bred to a Lavender a few weeks ago and appears to be in a “family way”. Hopefully, she’ll grace us with some nice eggs in a couple of weeks? No, this look is not reproducible. Just one of those rare snakes that has colors (or doesn’t have colors) that DO NOT derive from a heritable gene or genes? I couldn’t use a Nikon with a macro lens on the DAY I wrote this article, so this shot is from an iphone 7. Not as crisp resolution as I get from Nikon, but it adequately portrays this beautiful corn.
