Last year, some of our Palmetto customers commented on how little color the hatchlings had (an understandable question when they just paid $4,000.00 for their teeny white snake). Here is a picture of one of our breeders with some of her 2013 hatchlings. Obviously, they are pink now — which will slowly transform to white with maturity — but the few color flecks they have now will also saturate with color through maturity. Also, the number of color flecks they currently have will at least double in volume with maturity.
