

Show & Tell

This Anery Palmetto has an unusually low volume of pigment flecking. Originally identified as a Charcoal Palmetto, her eyes now indicate that she is an Anery A Palmetto double-mutant. Her irises were much darker as a neonate. That “unnatural” pose was the result of the snake arching up to touch the ceiling of a bowl that covered her just before shooting this pic.