

Show & Tell

This year's brood of Granite Gray-banded Kingsnakes (Lampropeltis alterna) are officially out of their eggs. I've said before—and am starting the long process of breeding trials—is that I believe this line owes their looks to a gene mutation. I have two lines of Granite Alterna, but this one not only exhibits consistent gender dimorphism for the morph, but also very stubbornly heritable aberrant patterns. BONUS PICs . . .
