

Show & Tell

Most Striped Bloodred corns do not have the orderly and contiguous striping seen on this one. The general distinction between the two different striped types is that most of the others have brighter red, in the absence of so much melanin associated with individuals with such black linear striping.