

This wee Scaleless Anery (from a second clutch of eggs) was out of her egg when I got home MonDAY from Daytona. She has more scale pattern-segments on her back than any of them from the first brood this year. My adults started out with super-bulbous eyes at this age, but they look much more normal now. If you removed the scale layer from around the eyes of a normal corn, the eyes would look as super-protruding as this one's. Just one of the flaws that come along with having the great colors we see in Scaleless corn snakes.
