

Show & Tell

These Charcoal Terrazzo corns began hatching August 26th. Here is most of the brood that will be feeding and ready for shipping by mid-September. Those gold flecks on their bodies are small pieces of vermiculite that we use to maintain humidity as their incubation medium. As adults, they mature to be pretty much the color you see here with barely discernible darker dorsal-lateral stripes running down most of their backs.