

Most of the back 1/3 of this 2013 Scaleless Anery corn is covered with atypically small and round scales that almost resemble decorative beads. That is not water you see reflecting light. It's the dramatic compound contour of the less-flattened scales reflecting the camera flash. This specimen begs the question, "are Scaleless and Micro-pave corn mutations closely related?".