

S O L D

From the SCRATCH & DENT DEPARTMENT, this 2013 female Lavender Tessera is now 21" long, eating frozen/thawed large pinky mice. She's priced low because she has several spinal "kinks" that are palpable, and some are visible. The blue arrow is pointing at the most obvious of them. The kinks are all the same relative size that they were when she hatched. In other words, none are growing disproportionately larger than the growth rate of the rest of her body. The "bend" in her tail will always be obvious, but most of the spinal kinks forward of the tail will only be detectable by feel, when she is an adult (since muscles will visually conceal most of them). Her $125.00 USD price includes She has great color for her age AND she's not a red-eyed Lavender. S O L D